What is an SBA Microloan?

The SBA Microloan program is different from any other type of SBA loan in several ways. Here are just a few distinguishing features of this program.

- The SBA Microloan is currently the only type of loan made directly from the SBA using SBA money (other SBA loans are the bank's money, backed by the SBA in case of default.)
- You cannot get an SBA Microloan through a Bank. Only 180 "Intermediaries" are authorized to submit SBA Microloan applications on behalf of small business borrowers...and all of them are listed in this report.
- Microloan Intermediaries are required by law to help borrowers with small business assistance and education programs. When you get an SBA Microloan, you're getting more than money, you're getting expertise!
- The SBA Microloan program takes extra measures to work with small businesses that do not qualify for other types of loans or funding!

How much can I borrow under this program?

Currently the maximum amount that can be borrowed under the SBA Microloan program is $35,000. There have been recent talks to expand the ceiling on the maximum loan amount as part of the economic stimulus package.

Keep in mind that an SBA Microloan can be part of your business funding strategy. Other lenders, including personal lenders, might be more inclined to extend your business a loan knowing that you have additional capital from other sources.

What Can the Funds from an SBA Microloan be Used For?

You can use the money received from an SBA microloan for most general business purposes. For example, you can use the loan to hire new people, purchase computers, equipment or supplies. You can also use the proceeds to purchase furniture or fixtures for your business. Any equipment or machines needed for your business also are fair game. Essentially, you can use the funds from your microloan for any business expense or general working capital. Your microloan intermediary can confirm whether your intended use of funds will qualify.

There are a few categories that are out of bounds for microloans. For example, you cannot use funds from a microloan to repay existing debt. That means you couldn't simply use the funds to pay off a credit card, or repay a loan from yourself or another lender.

Microloans cannot be used for the purchase of real estate either. This isn't usually an issue, given that the maximum amount of a microloan is not usually sufficient to finance a real estate purchase.

Will My Business Qualify for an SBA Microloan?

Microlender Intermediaries can help you determine for certain if your business will qualify for an SBA microloan. The list below will help you know what they'll be looking for in advance. Also, keep in mind that the Intermediaries are there to help you, not simply to tell you whether you do or do not qualify. Remember, the microloan program was created to help people who might not otherwise be able to get a loan.

Whether or not your business is already open, you should have a simple business plan before approaching a Microlender Intermediary about making a loan. You don't have to have an elaborate, professionally written document. However, you should be able to show that you've taken the time to think about how you will start, grow and prosper in your business so that you can repay the loan.

Here are a few of the most important factors Microlender Intermediaries will look at to determine if you qualify for a loan under this program.

Ability to repay the loan.

The microloan is just that, a loan. One of the first things that your Intermediary will want to see is how the loan will be repaid. They will want to see that the business will generate enough revenue to pay its expenses and repay the loan on time.

Your Background

Your character counts when applying for a microloan. Be prepared to demonstrate that you are a law-abiding citizen of good character. Any community involvement, whether it is volunteer work, or other types of community service, will also be looked upon favorably.

A Solid Business Plan

Anyone who seeks a business loan of any kind must have a business plan. An SBA microloan is no exception. Your business plan does not have to be elaborate. It does however, have to demonstrate that you have a product or service, that there is a market for your product or service, and that you have a plan for starting and operating the business. If your business is already started, you will need to show your financial statements. If you're not already in business, you will need to show financial projections.

For more help on how to write a business plan, including a free small business plan template and outline, visit <http://www.greatbusinessplans.com>

Sufficient Capital

SBA microloans are small amounts—under $35,000 as of this writing. Your Intermediary will want to ensure that what you already have (in terms of cash and other business assets) plus the amount you borrow will be sufficient to start the business and get it to the point where it can be profitable. Otherwise, they know, it will be difficult or impossible for the business to repay the loan. Nobody wants to lend the pilot enough money to buy fuel that will fly them only half way across the ocean!

Relevant Experience

The owners and operators of your business will be expected to have experience that is relevant to the business. Ideally, they will have worked in a business similar to the one to which the loan is being made. For example, if you're starting a lunch catering business, it's not enough that you enjoy cooking. You or one of your operators will be expected to have worked for a similar or related business. "Transferable skills" are helpful as well. For example, if you're starting a children's furniture store and have managed a retail clothing store, you should identify and stress the similarities and how the experience will help you succeed in the furniture store.

Commitment

Resiliency and commitment are important to succeeding in business. Therefore, these traits are important to have if you're trying to get a loan. The SBA will want to know that you are firmly committed to succeeding in this business and willing to work extremely hard to make sure that happens. Examples of your past commitment to setting and then achieving goals will be important indicators.

Collateral

When it comes to lending money, the SBA is just like a bank—they want to know how they will get their money back. Generally you will be expected to show two types of collateral. The first can be the cash flow from the business, but that won't be enough. If the business already has assets that are owned, it is likely that they will have to be pledged as collateral as well. Finally, if there are not sufficient assets to collateralize the loan, you will in most cases be asked to sign a personal guarantee. That means that if the business is unable to repay the loan, you will still be held accountable to repay the loan personally.

What if My Business Can't Repay the Loan?

An SBA microloan is a loan from the government. It is not a grant and it must be repaid. If your business is unable to repay the loan, the SBA will take steps similar to those which any other creditor would take. First, they will want to seize any collateral that was pledged against the loan. If you signed a personal guarantee, which is usually the case, they will want to make arrangements for you to make payments from personal sources, including future income.

Before taking out any loan, you should think about what the personal consequences will be if the loan is unable to be repaid on time.

How Do I Apply for an SBA Microloan?

To apply for an SBA Microloan you must contact an Authorized SBA Microlender Intermediary who works with small businesses in your geographical area. A complete list of all Intermediaries in the United States is found in the next section of this report.

Before you contact an Intermediary, we suggest that you familiarize yourself with all of the information in this report and take steps to create your business plan—which you will absolutely need.

Next, visit the website of the Intermediary and familiarize yourself with their organization and how they do business. Most have extensive websites with information for small business owners and future small business owners. Demonstrate that you are serious and responsible by visiting their website before making that first call.

Finally, when you are ready to start the process, contact the individual responsible for SBA Microloans within the organization(s) listed for your geographical area. We recommend letting them know the steps you have already taken and then asking to schedule an appointment to learn more about how they work with clients like you.

Almost all SBA Microlender Intermediaries are non-profit organizations whose missions include helping small businesses get funding and succeed. They are there to help you!
